Year	Year 7
Subject	History

Curriculum Intent – What are the curriculum aims?

4 Key Principles of the History Curriculum

Four key principles guide the curriculum choices we make, in terms of both substantive knowledge and how students learn best in a history classroom. We want students to both learn History and do History.

Apprentice Historians learn best when:

Wrestling with an Historical Enquiry Question.

In every History lesson at Plume, students will be asked to think about a key historical enquiry question. This might be for one particular lesson as part of a 'bigger' wider question, or it might be an enquiry question that lasts for several lessons. Every task students do in the lesson, or series of lessons, will relate to that historical question.

Engaging with Subject Knowledge.

Students must engage with a wide range of different types of historical knowledge: Clear, coherent narratives concerning people, institutions, places or events; recalled/narrated with ease so that the narrative is at the students' fingertips (ready to be called up at will, used in argument/analysis or re-told differently); Small-scale human stories that make larger-scale historical stories, events or changes meaningful and memorable; Macro-stories conveyed through generalisations and categorisations; Chronological frameworks; General 'sense of period' that helps students avoid anachronism and a specific 'sense of period' that facilitates the assimilation of smaller narratives or case studies; Knowledge acquired of historical periods, events or individuals that provides context for the study of a different period, event or individual. Appropriate period resonances attached to substantive concepts such as 'Parliament', 'Church', 'Federalism', 'loyalty' or 'taxation' (lots of stories and examples that build and develop a concept across the curriculum).

Exploring the particular.

In answering historical enquiry questions students must use specific accurate relevant knowledge - dates, statistics, proper names and technical vocab. This is acquired through a focus in lessons on the particular - what is specific to that moment then, the small-scale human story, the specific sense of period, or the period resonance of a substantive concept. E.g. The story of Leslie Kleinman a Holocaust survivor develops an understanding of the substantive concept of Genocide with period resonance and a specific sense of the era of WWII.

Teaching has a clear purpose.

Each historical enquiry question in the curriculum focuses on a specific area of historical thinking. As well as learning substantive knowledge, students also learn how history as an academic discipline works - disciplinary knowledge. In general, enquiries focus on either change, causation, significance or diversity (similarity and difference).

Making Progress as an Historian:

In history we want students to master a mental model of the past; we want them to have a deep sense of period, be able to tell stories with historical thinking just like an historian. We want them to learn and do history. And we want them to have a lot of fun as they do this! Student feedback will focus on 7 things we believe good historians are able to do. This will help students to set themselves targets and get better at History.

What Do Good Historians Do?

1 Good Historians Explain Why Things Happen.

They can show how events have many causes and how these link together. They can see that some causes are more important than others and that things happen due to the actions of people but also other causes e.g. the economy or religious beliefs. They also characterise events into different types of causes e.g. long term, political, root, triggers, etc. They realise that some actions lead to unintended consequences.

2 Good Historians Are Skilful At Using Evidence.

They can use evidence to make suggestions about what the past was like. They can compare different sources. They think about which pieces of evidence are best for answering questions. They think about the purpose of the source and the context in which it was made.

3 Good Historians Think About Different Views In The Past.

They understand that people in the past had very different ideas about the world than people today. They think about the time in which people lived and how this affected them. They understand that historical people had very different (diverse) experiences and views of the events in which they were involved.

4 Good Historians Understand How Things Changed Or Stayed The Same.

They understand that things in the past developed and changed over time. They understand that sometimes things stayed the same whilst other things changed. They know that changes happen at different speeds, and some changes are bigger than others. They identify pace of change, trends and turning-points.

5 Good Historians Understand Other Historians Interpretations Of The Past.

They can identify what other people have said about the past and understand people's opinions of historical people, events and developments. They understand that writing about the past is made by people at a particular point in time.

6 Good Historians Think About Why Something Is Historically Significant.

They understand that people, events or developments are significant not just because they result in change but because they reveal things about life in the past. They identify reasons why things in the past are included or excluded from history.

7 Good Historians Have Detailed Knowledge And Can Write Clearly.

They have a detailed understanding of different periods of history and can use this knowledge to explain things. They are able to write in clear paragraphs, use connectives and reach judgements, using evidence to support their answers. Literacy Mats, History Bingo and other teaching strategies will help them do this.

Substantive Knowledge Intent in Year 7:

- An understanding of the connections across Medieval Europe, Africa, and Asia – politically, socially and economically
- A developing sense of Medieval Christianity with concepts of Christian identity, the change, and localised experience of Christianity.
- A developing sense of Medieval Islam with concepts of Muslim identity, the spread of Islam, and localised experience of Islam.
- Conflict, cooperation and exchange between Medieval Christianity and Islam.
- To foster a developing understanding of diverse civilisations and their cultures across Medieval Asia, Africa and Europe.
- To grasp the changing dynamics of urban and rural Medieval life: gain a sense of the European geopolitics, power players, power brokers, operation of power in society, changing patterns over time through secure chronological framing and narrative moorings; including, but not limited to, England.
- Develop a sense of global interconnectedness during the Medieval period.
- Foundations for KS3, KS4 and KS5 studies, including migration, diversity, constructs of race and Empires.
- A growing narrative of political, social and economic (trade) stories in the Medieval World.
- Engaging with up-to-date recent historiography – writing by academic historians
